Title: The Constitutional Incoherence of Islam as the Official Religion of the State

Creators: An-Na’im Abdullahi
Contributors: Sanders, Courtney
Keywords: Islam, constitution, Shari’a Law
Issue Date: 2011-05-12
Publisher: Mershon Center for International Security Studies

Abstract: An-Na’im discussed how almost all the constitutions of Muslim majority countries stipulate that Islam is the religion of the state. Many constitutions also stipulate that Shari’a is the source of legislation. In his lecture, An-Na’im will argue that such provisions are not only incoherent, as the state is incapable of having a religion or enforce Shari’a as such, but also inconsistent with the principle of constitutionalism.

The Constitutional Incoherence of Islam as the Official Religion of the State An-Na’im, Abdullahi An-Na’im discussed how almost all the constitutions of Muslim state. Many constitutions also stipulate that Sharia is the source of legislation. In his lecture, An-Na’im will argue that such provisions are not only incoherent as such, but also inconsistent with the principle of constitutionalism itself. He will also highlight some of the problematic consequences of this confusion in the majority countries. ‘Stupid’ Terrorists? Why Homegrown Terrorists Are Often Incapable of Deadly Attacks in the United States
Sunday, May 22, 2011 8:00 PM

‘Stupid’ Terrorists? Why Homegrown Terrorists Are Often Incapable of Deadly Attacks in the United States Brooks, Risa Analysts and observers regularly observe homegrown terrorists incapable of preparing and executing their attacks, such that they are often apprehended and make crucial mistakes. Why is this? Are homegrown terrorists classes of terrorists? This presentation explores the interaction of three factors that explain the relative incapacity of terrorists in the United States: a security detections of terrorist activity, a lack of experience in terrorist tradecraft among aspiring militants, and the way that the security environment precludes individuals from even first place and successfully execute their attacks. Drawing from recent cases, especially instances of apparent Muslim-American “homegrown” terrorism, this presentation underscores the limited capacity of self-initiated terrorists to execute deadly attacks in the United States. Causal Responsibility and Voting
Thursday, February 17, 2011 7:00 PM

Causal Responsibility and Voting Brennan, Geoffrey Sayre-McCord, Geoff Brennan’s discussion was based off of a paper that is a response to a line of argument with minor modifications in Richard Tuck’s book Free-Riding (Harvard University Press, 2008). The argument seeks to extend the scope of voter responsibility by adding moral reasons why individuals should vote and also as explaining why so many of them do vote. Brennan argued that in the maintained as independent notions, that Goldman’s line yields the wrong advice for action-guidingness, and that the explanatory argument appeals to dubi
